SOULFUL SYMPHONIES

We are all performers at some point in our lives. What is life, after all, but a stage on which we set our scenes? We costume ourselves in clothing and utter the words befitting the character we wish to play, watching and waiting all the while for our intended audience's reaction. And when it's our cue, we must decide if we should retreat back into the dark or take center stage and shine.

Should you wander back into the dark, do not fret. Remember that there are those who have come before you. Perhaps you should like to call on them for guidance—and, perhaps they should like to answer.

The foliage of the woods is like a curtain, concealing us from our audience... from our world. As those curtains rise, see how the spotlight shines, hear the orchestra's swell. The moment approaches, all too real. Bare your soul and speak your heart, for your lines do not go unheard in the woods.

Heeeey, friend--!

Oh, not the singing!

What's wrong with singing?

I mean, it's Greg's singing, so I get it. But--

You could ride a bike one-handed...
...Or play the kazoo!

Maybe learn to swim with a giant squid...
...Build a castle with a view...

Oh! Hey, friend, I'll teach you something new!
If we're always learning new things...

So, hey, friend,
I'll teach you something new!

...Who knows what we could do?
Yes, hey, friend, I'll teach you something new!
