STRAYER

TAMRA BONVILLAIN • RACHEL DEERING

...you knew.

Good morning, Sheriff.

Did you bring it here...?

Strayer.

Didn't tell you last night?

I have to admit, things are still a little fuzzy. But I am pretty sure I told you what was coming.

You couldn't have known.

I've heard that before but now I hear--

DOOM

--that. So it looks like I could know.

Can you stop it?

Well, it's here now, so I don't see that you have much to lose, unless you intend to leave me here to get flattened with the rest of the town.

I don't. I don't aim to let my town be destroyed either. Let me get those off of you.

I'm good.

You...I... you could have done that anytime?

Yup.

But then... WHY?

Well, I needed someplace warm to sleep and your cell was cozier than most. Plus honestly...

I wanted you to ask me to help.

You agree to my fee then? Or should I just get to running with the rest of you fine folks?

I pay my debts.

I certainly hope so. Do you have my blades?

...you didn't wait
until it was close.
